OPCIÓN A

Route 66

Built in 1926, Route 66 was about 3,900 km of awesome asphalt running from Los Angeles to Chicago through California, Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Missouri, and Illinois. Before it was called Route 66, this corridor was traversed by the National Old Trails Highway, one of the country's first transcontinental highways. For three decades before and after World War II, Route 66 earned the title Main Street of America because it passed through small towns across the Midwest and Southwest, lined by hundreds of cafés, motels, gas stations, and tourist attractions. During the Great Depression (1929-1939), hundreds of thousands of farm families made their way west along Route 66 to California, following what novelist John Steinbeck called the Mother Road in "The Grapes of Wrath". After World War II, many thousands more left the industrial East looking for good jobs in the suburban idyll of Southern California, again following Route 66.

Although it was officially removed from the US Highway System in 1985, you can still drive on some portions of the "Mother Road". For example, from the busy streets of downtown Chicago to the palm trees and glitter¹ of Southern California, the Mother Road offers tons of kid-friendly attractions: cowboys and Indians, fiberglass giants, petting zoos², playgrounds, neon signs, tacky³ souvenirs and a thousand other entertainments no kid can resist.

Nowhere does the road appeal to my inner 5-year-old more than in Oklahoma, where you can literally walk into the mouth of a smiling blue whale; learn to twirl a lasso⁴; or fall asleep in a real teepee⁵, listening to coyotes sing a wild and beautiful lullaby in the distance.

¹Glitter: the excitement and attractive quality connected with rich and famous people.

²Petting zoo: an open area where young animals are kept for children to touch or feed.

³Tacky: of cheap quality and/or in bad style.

⁴Lasso: rope; a tool of the American cowboy.

⁵Teepee: a cone-shaped tent traditionally used by Native Americans.

OPCIÓN B

Video games 'stimulate learning'

A UK study concluded that simulation and adventure games —such as Sim City and RollerCoaster Tycoon, where players create societies or build theme parks— develop children's strategic thinking and planning skills. Parents and teachers also thought that their children's mathematics, reading and spelling improved.

The investigation into the habits of 700 children aged seven to 16 also found that, far from being a solitary activity, children preferred to play games in pairs or small groups. The kids actually said that working in a team was the most important aspect of playing video games.

The research from the group Teachers Evaluating Educational Multimedia (TEEM) is being studied by the Department for Education.

The director of TEEM, Prof. A. McFarlane, said there was much to learn from the games industry in terms of developing scenarios that really challenged and engaged children, rather than reproducing textbooks on the screen. "Adventure, quest and simulation type games have a lot of benefit —they're quite complex and create a context in which children can develop important skills," said Prof. McFarlane. "We're not advocating¹ arcade, shoot-the-baddie² type games, however" she emphasized.

Teachers often found it difficult to justify the use of simulation or adventure computer games during school time because their content did not map the national curriculum, said Prof. McFarlane. But if educational material could be built in, such games could be used in the classroom legitimately, she said.

The TEEM study comes at a moment when other researchers argue the multimedia age has put children off reading and has produced a generation which spends too much time playing indoors.

²Baddie: a bad character in a book, movie, etc.

I. Reading comprehension. Choose the correct answer and write it on your answer sheet, like this: I.1.x; I.2.x; I.3.x; 1.4.x, and 1.5.x, where "x" is your answer (A, B, or C). [Total: 25% (5x5% each)]

I.1. Choose the best option (A, B, or C). According to the study mentioned in the text, ...

- A) ... parents should make their children play Sim City and RollerCoaster Tycoon.
- B) ... children should learn the skills involved in creating societies or building theme parks.
- C) ... certain types of video games can help develop strategic thinking and planning skills.

I.2. Only ONE of the options below (A, B, or C) is FALSE. Which? 700 is the number of children who ...

- A) ... took part in the mentioned study.
- B) ... concluded that video game playing is mainly a solitary activity.
- C) ... actually said team work was the most important aspect of video games.

I.3. Choose the correct statement (A, B, or C).

- A) The Department of Education is seriously considering the research carried out by TEEM.
- B) A similar study to that of TEEM is being carried out by the Department of Education.
- C) The Department of Education is studying this research, but is not likely to use it.

I.4. Choose the best option (A, B, or C). Prof. McFarlane says that teachers ...

- A) ... are not in favor of using commercially produced video games in educational contexts.
- B) ... could make more use of video games with educational purposes if they included curricular contents.
- C) ... are not in favor of using video games in the classroom, only for homework purposes.

I.5. Choose the best option (A, B, or C). Other researchers ...

- A) ... consider that the next generation will spend less time playing indoors.
- B) ... claim that video game playing is resulting in less reading and less outdoors playing.
- C) ... demand a balance between video game playing and reading skills development.
