

INGLÉS. CÓDIGO 102*OPCIÓN A*McDonald's

McDonald's is a multinational chain with restaurants all over the world. Indeed, you would probably be hard-pushed to find a country without a few McDonald's restaurants somewhere within its borders. The company is now so big that you could be forgiven for thinking that it has always existed. But it hasn't. It was started in the first half of the 20th century by two brothers—neither of whom was named Ronald!

Reports differ about when Richard and Maurice McDonald opened their first restaurant. Some would state that the Airdrome in Arcadia, California was the very first, in 1937. Others claim that it all began in 1940 with the McDonald's Barbecue restaurant in San Bernardino, California. What is not in dispute, however, is that both restaurants were false starts. They were the kind of restaurant where cars park around a central hub and the food is delivered to the waiting customers by 'car hops'*. In 1948, the brothers became disaffected by this style of restaurant, and decided to scale down the operation. They developed the idea of an 'assembly line' whereby a reduced menu (burgers, fries and drinks) could be cooked cheaper and quicker, which would lead to a higher turnover of customers. And so it was, on 12 December, 1948, that the new renovated McDonald's restaurant opened, and Richard cooked the first McDonald's hamburger. During the next years, the restaurant went from strength to strength, and the building had a slight redesign. The brothers had a slender yellow arch built at each end of the building, looping over it but not yet joined together to make the now famous 'M'.

*Car hop: a waiter(-tress) who brings food to your car at a drive-in restaurant, on foot or on roller-skates.

OPCIÓN BWho was first?*Was Columbus really the first to discover America?

Not the first. In fact, when he sailed the ocean blue in 1492, he was greeted by the Tainos on the island now known as San Salvador in the Caribbean. And he was not even the first European to land in America. That honor goes to Erik the Red, who happened upon Greenland when he was exiled from Iceland in 982 AD. Cultural tradition held that the Vikings had also explored and perhaps settled in areas west of Greenland. But archaeological proof did not come to light until the early 1960s, when the ruins of a Viking village were discovered in Newfoundland (Canada). The Viking colonies flourished in Greenland for some 500 years, and then disappeared for reasons as yet unknown.

What Columbus DID accomplish

He opened up a new continent to Spain and all of Europe. His voyages reshaped the known world. Europeans were introduced to strange foods, exotic animals ... and a new source of gold, and Caribbean natives to new diseases and alien methods of conquest and domination. Columbus' voyages planted seeds that grew into many new nations. For the indigenous population, however, they were the beginning of a centuries-long ordeal.

Thus the question "Did Columbus discover America?" seems an arrogant one, one that completely writes off the accurate history. A better question might be, "Was Columbus the first European to find his way to the Americas?" The answer would still be "No, Erik the Red did," but this way the questioner is not ignoring the historical reality from a more global point of view.
